Volunteers needed for Space Station water recovery testing

Civil service volunteers are needed to support testing of the International Space Station Water Recovery System. Participants will generate waste water by exercising and performing hygiene activities. A physical exam and treadmill test are required for volunteers. Testing will begin in June and end in December. Volunteers must obtain approval from their supervisor and be a full-time Marshall civil service employee. To participate, call Paul Wieland at 544-7215 by March 31.
